

Nonconvex Factor Adjustments in Dynamic Equilibrium Models

Aubhik Khan

September 2004

Course Description

We will survey recent research on the aggregate implications of nonconvex factor adjustment costs. We will examine their effect on the long-run distribution of investment and job turnover, and on aggregate fluctuations. Lectures will cover both empirical papers that provide evidence of these nonconvexities with quantitative equilibrium research that attempts to assess the aggregate implications of such phenomena. An additional focus of the class will be on numerical methods that allow us to address some of the heterogeneity seen in the data using stochastic dynamic general equilibrium models.

Outline
